

KATIE CLINE

Co-Founder and Director of Operations at National Registry for Adoption (NRFA)

Key Focus: Connecting Adoptable Embryos with their Adoptive Families

Katie Cline leverages her knowledge and skills combined with her real-life experience as a serial entrepreneur and twin mom to help families grow through embryo donation and adoption. Katie is an embryo donor who understands what it means to go through fertility treatments.

NRFA is an online destination that connects families waiting to adopt with embryo donors and connects birth parents with hopeful adoptive families. The Dallas, Texas company was founded in 2014 and is comprised of people with first-hand experience in child and embryo adoption or donation.

Katie and NRFA co-founder Charis Johnson created this matching service to ease the challenges of donating embryos or finding a match in an adoption registry. They know how long and frustrating the adoption process can be, so they do their best to make adopting or matching easy and fast.

CONNECT WITH KATIE

 katie.cline@nrfa.org

 www.nrfa.org

 in/katie-cline-8314bb3

 @NRFA

 /NRFA.org

INTERVIEW TOPICS

- The entrepreneurial instinct
- My donated embryos are twin boys
- The one reason America has so many frozen embryos in storage
- 10 benefits to donating your embryos for adoption
- Embryo adoption vs. traditional adoption: the cost breakdown